WalkthroughCollectiblesCheats and SecretsAchievements and Trophies Anno 2205 is the latest in an extremely successful string of PC exclusive city-builders developed by Ubisoft. After much anticipation, Anno 2205 has been released, but not without a few annoying bugs along the way. Use this guide to remedy most of the common bugs players have been running into.Common Bug FixesAlthough critically acclaimed, the Anno series is notorious for being riddled with bugs upon launching. These are some of the most popularly asked about issues and how to fix them.Day/Night Cycle Button Location and How it OperatesFirst and foremost, your Day and Night Cycle buttons can be found by activating your minimap and clicking on the camera button on the bottom right. This will bring up an extra set of buttons. Image Credit - SpadieThe lowest, orange button is to start the cycle. The fast forward button is to skip ahead to the next phase. Phases are as follows: Noon Sunset Midnight Sunrise Players can also use the F11 key for faster rotations.Collecting Fuel and Where to Find itDuring military missions, players will continuously collect fuel until he/she is capped out.To see your fuel bar, it's simply the zigzag bar located in the bottom center of the screen. Missing Buildings, Vehicles, and AircraftsSome players have been complaining that they're scrolling along and all of a sudden, certain structures have disappeared - such as warehouses or airships.If your Command Ship is missing you can try: Pressing the Tab key twice to jump to your ship. Restarting your game in search of a patch or update. Restarting your computer. If your structures are missing you can try: Switching between maps. Relaunching the game. No Senor in Cape AmbarIn the sector project in Cape Ambar, players must use a drone to find four Scattered Remains. Usually, your map will point you in the right direction by using red flashing lights.However, this bug turns the lights off leaving players with no way to finish the quest. To fix this, unfortunately, players will have to restart the entire corporation.Where to Find DiamondsIn order to advance to certain regions, such as the Arctic Region, players will need to collect diamonds. In order to collect them, you'll need to open the mine in whatever region you're in, as they're all located inside mines. Unlocking region mines may require certain advances. In the Temperate Region, for example, the mine will be unlocked when you advance to investors.Are We Missing Anything?If you have a question or concern about Anno 2205 that isn't listed above, let us know and we'll add it to the list. In the meantime, you can catch any of our other Anno 2205 articles here. Our guide to getting started with Anno 2205 features essential insight from the developers on expanding your fledgling settlements. Anno 2205 is out today on PC (we'll have a review for you in the coming days) and this latest version of the city-builder continues the series' futuristic flavour with a new goal of steering your corporation towards its very own colony on the moon. As well as the usual city-planning challenges, you'll also have to manage multiple settlements and coordinate trade routes between regions if you're to reach your ultimate destination. If you've dabbled with Anno games in the past, you'll know that there can be quite a lot to take on board if you're not familiar with some of the fundamental nuts and bolts. With that in mind, we got in touch with the development team to ask for their thoughts on a few areas we've come unstuck on in the past. What they came back to us was so insightful, that we have for the most reproduced their thoughts for you below. On this page: Anno 2205 - city layouts, environments, trade routes, naval combatHow to get started with the early foundations of your fledgling cities. Other pages: Anno 2205 - keyboard shortcuts, tips, factories, upgradesManaging expansion and maximising your production facility upgrades. There are quite a few things to consider when you lay out your settlements - production areas, housing, energy needs and so on. It helps to have a plan, and know exactly what it is you want to achieve, so here are a few tips for creating an efficient infrastructure. Try to plan ahead, and keep in mind module sizes and amounts when laying out your city. Use the movement tool and test around with your layouts. The further away a house is from a public building, the more of its supply it will consume. So place your public buildings centrally so as to extend their reach in all directions. Below is an example of how you can perfectly fit an Infodrome into your starting city. In the Arctic sectors you need to supply your houses with heat, which is given off by production facilities. This means you need to mix industry and houses. A good piece of advice here is to take advantage of modules which don't need a street connection. Geothermal Turbines and Gas Power Stations have the biggest heat radius. On the moon it is important to build an effective shield. Shield generators come in two sizes and cost extra upkeep. You should try to minimize any overlap between them to optimise the cost-benefit ratio. As always with Anno: If you have a gap try to figure out what could fit. A bigger vehicle is not always better than two small ones. Transporting 40 tons with two small transporters is always cheaper than using a bigger one. It's a balance between maximizing savings and ease of management. You can easily calculate your transport costs per ton. Here is an example for transferring 100t of goods between two temperate regions: 5 x 20t routes cost 5*50 credits/minute = 250 credits/minute 1 x 150t route costs 300 credits/minute 5 routes with 20t are most cost effective 1 route with 100t is the more comfortable to manage At a certain point the more comfortable option also becomes more effective (add 20t to the example above and the costs are the same), so remember to check your routes from time to time to see if you can optimize. Just like the real world, money makes the world(s) go around in Anno, and you'll need to manage your incomings and outgoings carefully if you're to remain stable and in a good position to expand your settlements. Balance your economy by balancing your production and the consumption of your employees. Keep an eye on your balances - a zero balance is perfect as it means everything you produce is consumed. A slight under-production is better than a big over-production, as the latter will fill up your storage fast. When your storage space is completely full, any over-production (and the credits you spent achieving it) is lost. If you plan to upgrade your employees, it's a good idea to have a positive balance of the goods they will need. Fulfill old needs before you fulfill new ones, as the new ones will most likely cost you more money in the beginning. That happens if one facility produces much more than your employees consume. To bring in more money, start upgrading or expanding your city. If, however, you expand too much without upgrading, you might be unable to access new land via bridges. Bridges require a certain amount and a certain type of employees. If you cannot provide these then the bridge can't be build. You might need to go back and tear down parts of your city to meet these requirements. A final tip for expansion is that you should check early on if the other islands in your sector can be connected via bridges or with additional Warehouses. Later in the game you can check the strategic view for new sectors that you can acquire from your competitors. The naval missions in Anno 2205 have you commanding a small fleet of ships in a map-wide battle against enemy forces. Here are a few pointers to help you maximise the time you spend in this section of the game. Upgrade your ships if you can afford it. They last longer and deal more damage, speeding up your progress overall. Do the side quests. There are always three of them in each fight, and they give out additional Rare resources for completing tasks that you can probably do quickly on the side. Minefields can usually be utilised to your advantage. Try to lure enemies into them and then fire on the mines. If you are overwhelmed, try to flee. Your ships are fast and the enemies will eventually stop chasing you. The different Enemy classes drop different Special Actions: Bombarders & Bomb Drones can drop Nukes, Hunters & Drone Carriers can drop Support Fleets, and Defenders & Maintainers can drop EMPs. Captain Units can drop all Actions. The EMP is ideal for stopping Drone Carriers or Harbors from spawning more enemies for you to deal with. Even if you're done with the main objective, check the rest of the map for enemy towers, turrets and harbours (they drop Rare Materials too), as well as Rare Material storages. If you unlock a higher difficulty, give it a go but upgrade your ships beforehand and be careful. It's always harder in the beginning and takes a bit longer to complete, but the rewards are also much greater. In the end it's always worthwhile and more efficient to play the missions in a harder mode. The hard difficulties require you to play offensively. Make sure you actively engage enemy fleets, as you'll need the Fuel and Actions that they leave behind on the map. Check different Missions as they feature other mission objectives, such as destroying the so-called Eradicators before they reach the allied base, or seizing strategic points on the map from the enemy. Check your ships for their roles. For example, the Flare vessel that you get a little later in the game is a fragile artillery ship that won't help a lot against other ships, but is awesome when it comes to taking out those pesky Fortified Towers. - The next part of our guide covers keyboard shortcuts and factory upgrades in Anno 2205.
